THE NOVEL-READER.

'Twas very sweet of a summer's eve,

To hear her talk and sing

Of stars and dew, and rocks and caves,

And all that sort of thing.

I fitted her for her mild blue eye,

And her sweet and quiet air;

But I'm very sure that I didn't see

The novel on her chair.

I longed to have a quiet wife,

For a noise quite drove me frantic;

But to have a novel-reading spouse

Is anything but romantic.

The live-long day does LAURA read

In a cushioned easy-chair,

In slippers and a dirty gown,

And tangled, uncombed hair.

The children look like beggars' brats,

And little have they of breeding;

Yet this is but one of the many ills

That flow from novel-reading.

For oh! the meals! I'm very sure

You never did see such reading!

For the beef is burnt, and the veal is raw,

And all from novel-reading.

The bed-room's very like a sty,

And the kitchen seems a stable;

The larders lie like a pig-sty,

And the nursery is a stable.

Ho! Youth in search of a quiet wife,

Before the shrine you lead her;

Take care, I pray you, take good care

That she isn't a novel-reader!

APPLE-DUMPLINGS.

"What the plum-pudding is to Old England," I said to my wife, at the same time loosening a button or two of my waistcoat, "the apple-dumpling" is looking complacently down upon one plate before me, 'tis to New England.

It is the mainstay, as a sailor might say, of the domestic. Indeed, it is not impossible to make off of it an entire dinner. It bears no likeness to the fummary and "pretty little tiny" kick-shaws of French extraction, which phase the palate of your dainty boarding-school Miss; but it is a right down honest, earnest, tumbling son of a dish, which our grandmothers, in the good old times, were not ashamed to place before a hungry man. Without possessing the richness, indigestibility, and costliness of the plum-pudding, it is quite as satisfying to the appetite, and much more healthful. Besides, it has the reputation of being a national dish, and as such merits our heartiest support. It was not known in England, as I have been assured by very good authorities—Peter Pindar to the contrary notwithstanding—until after the Revolutionary war; and the story of the first time the Britishers partook of it, as recorded in the veritable history of the Island of Nantucket, written by one of the Colonies, is well worth recounting.

I remember having heard my great-grandfather relate it many years ago, and I was impressed by its air of truthfulness,

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

OPENING OF CONGRESS—SCENES IN THE HOUSE ON MONDAY—DEMOCRATIC SCHEMING TO EXCLUDE COLORADO.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4, 1876.

The "Ex-Confederate Congressional

Bureau Trust" has no reason to complain of the overflowing and enthusiastic audience which greeted its re-appearance today.

As usual, the company occupied the parquet in force and kept up the usual trouper and confusion, which is a prominent characteristic of this popular troupe; the dress-rehearsal showed no diminution in the number of the friends and hangers-on of the artists, and the galleries presented an exquisite picture of beauty and appreciation which must have drawn tears of delight from the blessed company of entertaining managers. The reserved seats were occupied, as is the custom at this popular resort, by the nation's ablest abolitionists, and their spin, but on on this particular occasion it is doubtful whether Solomon, in all his glory, was ever arrayed like the majority of these.

The Democratic Association of the State—famously known as the "Dead

Asses"—were ranged in splendid array in the rear of the company, forming with their smiling countenances and fine beard and mustache, a fine and scenic effect pleasing beyond description.

The reporters' gallery presented, as usual,

an array of brilliant physiognomies wherein modest intelligence and unobtrusive assurance existed in about equal proportions.

From their well-known distinguished position, it is needless to add, they were engaged in a most interesting and entertaining manner, and the balance made up by the ranks of Washington humanity, for whom dead-head performances have an irresistible charm. As for the presence of the troupe itself, no change was remarked in its appearance of last season, unless perhaps the picturesqueness of the marked the temporary presence of the the play. The roll is called and 248 members respond to their names, which is anounced by the Clerk, who declares a quorum present. Mr. Holman and Mr. Banks contest the honor of setting the Congress-sional hall in motion; the former with a resolution and the latter upon a question of privilege to present the credentials of the member from Colorado. To enable him to cast his vote for Speaker, Mr. Holman's resolution turns out to be a motion to precede to the organization of the House, and after considerable skirmishing the Clerk declares Mr. Holman's motion shall take precedence. Mr. Banks appealing from decision, the appeal, on motion of Mr.

Cox, was laid upon the table by a strict party vote, 165 to 134. This matter disposed the morning session, and the House springing to its feet, like a diminutive jack-in-the-box, and nominating Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, for Speaker. Altho ugh, Garfield is nominated by Mr. Mc-

Crack, the election of Mr. Randall is a foregone conclusion, and to him the call of the office is administered by Mr. Holman.

Several of several new members are presented and they are sworn in. When the credentials of the member from Colorado were read, the friends of the proposed is raised that the Judiciary Committee must first decide whether Colorado is a State of the Union. In open session, the credentials are sent to the Judiciary Committee, and the "obnoxious" member is excluded from the House. The House is the evident intention to make an effort to throw out the electoral vote of Colorado, the speaker, Mr. Randall, and Mr. Cox taking to that direction, an effort quite in keeping with the reckless course

the House has developed, and four o'clock

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEMOCRATIC DEFEAT.—DREADFUL DEPRESSION. DISCUSSION DISCLOSED. DIVISION DISASTROUS. DOUBTS DISSIPATED.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10, 1876.

The first week of the new session of Congress has ended and the country has been little benefited by its labors as though it had passed the interval in its individual parties. The new speaker, as was to have been expected, has developed into a man of no great importance, and his principal office has been to preside over the proceedings of the House. Under the leadership of the first day of his incumbency, he has continued in a straight forward course, but with a jaundiced and cynical eye. The fact that he is Mr. Tilden's appointee, and the tool of the democratic managers, may account for all the wonderful things he has done in the execution of his duties. His promptness, who has been Samuel J. Randall, would submit to the public dictation of others, as evinced by at least three occurrences of the past week. On the occasion of the suspension of the rules to permit the passage of Mr. Hewitt's resolution to send committees to the South, every reporter in the gallery witnessed the handing up of the list of the committee in Mr. Hewitt's hand, and the order of the day was given by the speaker, who immediately announced as written. On the succeeding day, when Mr. Plaford claimed the right of having his name recorded as it was given, which change would have the effect of annulling the action of the day before by which the rules were suspended, Mr. Randall's sense of shame was having a severe tussle with his obstinacy, with the chances in favor of the latter, when a member from the floor hurried to the platform and whispered in the speaker's ear. A diabolical smile overcame the countenance of that personage as he hastened to decide in Mr. Plaford's favor, to the surprise of every one on the floor. But the reason was soon apparent as a member from the democratic side rose to a similar question of privilege, which of course was readily granted, and a tie vote announced. Then came the most extraordinary action known to parliamentary precedent or usage, whereby the speaker, upon a correction of the day before which involved a purely party question, claimed his privilege of giving the casting vote and saved the measure. The result establishes that Mr. Tilden's Secretary is to be governed by nothing but what will insure to the best interests of his party. When it is added that he has taken the earliest opportunity to decide what every one knows to be false, viz: that the joint rules are still in force, the limit of subservience is reached at the same moment with the absurdity of the ruling, the vote of 50 to 4 that the joint rules are in force. This is the greater anomaly, the existence of joint rules to which, one body is a party, or a decision without an issue, it will remain for Mr. Randall to reconcile with his own inordinate partisan ship.

It seems generally admitted at the Capital, that

of Wednesday has decided the contest, and that nothing but a miracle could save Mr. Hayes from his inauguration on the 20th of March. In a conversation with several members on Saturday evening I was assured that nothing of consequence would result from the action of Governor Grover of Oregon, beyond the possible refusal of the Senate to admit him at the next session. In the Oregon case it seems conceded that the Republican mistake was in not obtaining an injunction to restrain Grover from issuing a certificate to Cronin, and thus avoid any possible question as to the result, but the democrats admit that while Cronin had the opportunity of doing his party an inestimable service, his conduct in not insisting upon casting his vote with his certified colleagues, has demolished their plans in that quarter beyond repair. They assert with unnecessary fervor that the President of the Senate must go behind the Governor's certificate and admit the solid vote of Oregon for Hayes. The reason for this remarkable display of magnanimity is apparent. They claim that this done, he must go behind the Returning Board of Louisiana, and accept the face of the returns as proof of the election of the Tilden electors. But here they are confronted by another blunder. The certificate of the Tilden electors of Louisiana is signed by McEnery, against whose pretensions both the Republican Senate and the Democratic House have decided, and by the admission of Representatives holding the certificate of G. V. Kellogg. To exhaust the list of contingencies likely to operate in Mr. Tilden's favor, I inquired of a democratic Member from the South what would be the effect of the throwing out of Louisiana's vote, which he asserted would surely be done, and was answered, that the electoral college being thus reduced below the constitutional number neither candidate would receive a majority and the election would go into the House.

"And what then?" I inquired.

"And then," said he, "the House voting by States, in a majority of which the Democrats have a majority of the delegation, would elect Mr. Tilden."

"But," I suggested, "the Constitution requiring that when the House votes for President, a quorum shall consist of two-thirds of the States, is it not within the power of the members coming from Republican States to prevent the constitutional quorum?"

"It certainly is," he replied; "but we hardly anticipate such action on their part to defeat the will of the people. Why, such a course would be revolutionary and they would not dare do it."

Considering the revolutionary means by which Mr. Tilden's friends propose to count him in, the counterchange savors of an exquisite irony that is refreshing to contemplate.

It cannot be denied that the Southern members are seriously considering the fact of ment of a few New York politicians who had already in prospect divided the honors of the government between them, all opposition to this apparent fact would have disappeared with the announcement of Wednesday's vote. Chagrined upon the part of such men as Fernando Wood, Sam Cox, Abram S. Hewitt and Samuel J. Randall, has taken various forms during the week. Up to Wednesday they considered the game their own, relying upon such chances as the bribery of an elector in one of the Southern States, or of treachery upon the part of some Hayes elector, as devoutly hoped by Prof. Seeley. Considering but a single vote lying in the balance the chances were decidedly in their favor, for no one would seriously take the trouble to deny that had Mr. Lowell, for instance, cast his electoral vote for Mr. Tilden that gentleman would have been elected beyond any legal doubt. With such chances in their favor, the Southern committee, after appointed and organized on Monday night and Tuesday, were for various petty reasons detained until after the announcement of the electoral vote on Wednesday night. Several prominent gentlemen have been uncharitably enough to assert that had the one longed for vote been diverted to Mr. Tilden's side, the said committee would have been defeated indefinitely. But on Thursday morning it was ascertained that every plan had failed and the game was up. For a time they were disposed to mutter, and threaten, and declaim violently of fraud and civil war and impediment, and other terrible results of such integrity, upon the part of the Republican electors.

On Thursday the House adjourned after the Democrats had immediately introduced the caucus. The discussion was a stormy one, Messrs. Randall, Wood and Springer were enthusiastic for the immediate impeachment of the President, though singularly undetermined as to the grounds for such action. Opposition came from an unexpected quarter, when Hon. Hill, of Georgia, plainly intimated that the South would have no stock in revolutionary measures, and that the only way to the North was to let the Northern Democrats must go to this time alone. Fernando Wood failed, and fretted to no purpose—the most that he could obtain being the appointment of a committee, to whom should be submitted all party measures before their presentation to the House. It cannot be questioned that the majority are kept well in hand. All submission is demanded, and men to the speaker, and its immediate announcement as written. On the succeeding day, when Mr. Plaford claimed the right of having his name recorded as it was given, which change would have the effect of annulling the action of the day before by which the rules were suspended, Mr. Randall's sense of shame was having a severe tussle with his obstinacy, with the chances in favor of the latter, when a member from the floor hurried to the platform and whispered in the speaker's ear. A diabolical smile overcame the countenance of that personage as he hastened to decide in Mr. Plaford's favor, to the surprise of every one on the floor. But the reason was soon apparent as a member from the democratic side rose to a similar question of privilege, which of course was readily granted, and a tie vote announced. Then came the most extraordinary action known to parliamentary precedent or usage, whereby the speaker, upon a correction of the day before which involved a purely party question, claimed his privilege of giving the casting vote and saved the measure. The result establishes that Mr. Tilden's Secretary is to be governed by nothing but what will insure to the best interests of his party. When it is added that he has taken the earliest opportunity to decide what every one knows to be false, viz: that the joint rules are still in force, the limit of subservience is reached at the same moment with the absurdity of the ruling, the vote of 50 to 4 that the joint rules are in force. This is the greater anomaly, the existence of joint rules to which, one body is a party, or a decision without an issue, it will remain for Mr. Randall to reconcile with his own inordinate partisan ship.

It seems generally admitted at the Capital, that

of Wednesday has decided the contest, and that nothing but a miracle could save Mr. Hayes from his inauguration on the 20th of March. In a conversation with several members on Saturday evening I was assured that nothing of consequence would result from the action of Governor Grover of Oregon, beyond the possible refusal of the Senate to admit him at the next session. In the Oregon case it seems conceded that the Republican mistake was in not obtaining an injunction to restrain Grover from issuing a certificate to Cronin, and thus avoid any possible question as to the result, but the democrats admit that while Cronin had the opportunity of doing his party an inestimable service, his conduct in not insisting upon casting his vote with his certified colleagues, has demolished their plans in that quarter beyond repair. They assert with unnecessary fervor that the President of the Senate must go behind the Governor's certificate and admit the solid vote of Oregon for Hayes. The reason for this remarkable display of magnanimity is apparent. They claim that this done, he must go behind the Returning Board of Louisiana, and accept the face of the returns as proof of the election of the Tilden electors. But here they are confronted by another blunder. The certificate of the Tilden electors of Louisiana is signed by McEnery, against whose pretensions both the Republican Senate and the Democratic House have decided, and by the admission of Representatives holding the certificate of G. V. Kellogg. To exhaust the list of contingencies likely to operate in Mr. Tilden's favor, I inquired of a democratic Member from the South what would be the effect of the throwing out of Louisiana's vote, which he asserted would surely be done, and was answered, that the electoral college being thus reduced below the constitutional number neither candidate would receive a majority and the election would go into the House.

"And what then?" I inquired.

"And then," said he, "the House voting by States, in a majority of which the Democrats have a majority of the delegation, would elect Mr. Tilden."

"But," I suggested, "the Constitution requiring that when the House votes for President, a quorum shall consist of two-thirds of the States, is it not within the power of the members coming from Republican States to prevent the constitutional quorum?"

"It certainly is," he replied; "but we hardly anticipate such action on their part to defeat the will of the people. Why, such a course would be revolutionary and they would not dare do it."

Considering the revolutionary means by which Mr. Tilden's friends propose to count him in, the counterchange savors of an exquisite irony that is refreshing to contemplate.

It cannot be denied that the Southern members are seriously considering the fact of

TOWN AND VICINITY.

Prof. Churchill's Readings.

At the Union Church, last Tuesday evening, in the Perkins Literary Course, gave a most enjoyable entertainment to his audience. After a brilliant and successful performance by Mrs. Willard Richards, the reader commenced with selections from Nicholas Nickleby, portraying the characters of the unfeeling brutes, Squeers, and other personages, in an admirable manner. His delineations of the humorous and pathetic, in the scene in the London tavern, where Squeers administers diluted and adulterated supplies of bread, at the same time compelling the boys to "restrain their passions," and the woful tale of Smike, when he recounts his long years of suffering, manifested a dramatic power and culture which stamps Prof. Churchill as a reader of unusual talent.

In the selection from "Oldtown Stories," Sam Lawson's injunction, "Boys, never laugh nor out in a meeting," was family brought out in the scene between the two men, who was continually tapping the boys over the head for slight peccadilloes of sleeping in meeting, and the pugnaucious man who was leading near the door where Deacon himself sat nodding one hot Sunday afternoon on the sea.

Deacon's nodding as a challenge to combat and delivering so well directed a butt that the sleeper was projected several feet into the air, at which the person, who was praying with his eyes open, was forced into involuntary laughter, causing a terrible commotion among his parishioners. Way brought the matter before a counsel, when a gravey decided, after hearing the pastor's story, that he should hereafter pray with his eyes shut.

Longfellow's poem, "King Robert of Sicily," was the next selection, the chant "The Monk" being put down the night from his seat, being intoned in its own way by the reader in an impressive manner.

The "Chief Engineer's Story" of the little steamboat on board of an English vessel who was threatened with insurrection by the mutiny and rough manner, was a most thrilling selection, and Mark Twain's supposititious scene between a newspaper reviewer and John Young Brown touching the latter's story in happy denunciation of his misdeeds.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

EAST WEYMOUTH, Dec. 15, 1876.

Building.

Mr. Wm. E. Hawes is putting up a house on High Street. Mr. Vinal is the contractor.

Renovating.

Mr. Benjamin F. Godwin, the popular barber, has recently had his tonorial parlour improved by papering, painting, and the exchange of old for new chairs. Mr. Godwin is very popular in the village, and this improvement in his room will add still more to his popularity. "Ben means business."

Return.

Mr. Jacob N. L. Bicknell, who has been sojourning at the "Vineyard" the past season, returned home with his family, yesterday. Mr. Bicknell has enjoyed very good health during his stay at "Martha's."

Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Emmons occurs next Monday evening, and each member is earnestly requested to be present, as business of importance comes up for debate.

Erin go Bragh.

Last evening Burke's "Tableaux of Erin" was given in Town Hall by Burke's famous comedy company, showing up the characteristics and peculiarities of the Irish people at home, being a very good representation of its kind.

Concert.

Star of Promise Section No. 5, C. of H. & T., celebrated its anniversary last Monday evening. The entertainment consisted of singing by the "Vineyard," Mr. W. F. Durrell, accompanist on piano; recitations by Miss Sarah Mills, Misses Arthur Hawes, Samuel French and William Tirrell, after which Mr. Geo. W. Dyer, assisted by Rev. N. L. Grady, exhibited some Magic Lantern pictures, consisting of views of the Centennial buildings and their interiors, also scenes from the Bible, among which were the "Lord's Supper" and "Jesus Walking on the Sea." Owing to the weather, the hall was not so well filled as it would have been if the walking had been better. As it was, the Cadets cleared $12.

Counting.

In the District Court at Quincy, last Tuesday, before Trial Justice Bumpus, M. L. Cushing, of this place, was arraigned for selling intoxicating beverages, and fined fifty dollars and costs. He appealed.

Fair.

The Unitarian Society held their fifth annual fair, in Temple Hall, next Monday and Tuesday afternoons and evenings, at which a variety of fancy and useful articles were sold for the benefit of the poor. The next lecture of the Society will be given by Wendell Phillips on Thursday evening, Dec. 28.

Runaway.

Tuesday, while Mr. John Carroll was taking a turn around town in his sleigh, in turning out for another sleigh his horse suddenly became unmanageable, and after kicking the front of the sleigh to kindling wood started up Broad Street at a smart pace, passing dangerously near the bank near the Catholic church, and ran some distance further before Mr. Carroll was able to cool him down, and the animal was stopped without further damage.

Incident.

Last evening a large delegation of Templars from "Mechanics Temple" paid a visit to Quincy, to participate in the institution of a Temple in that place.

Building.

Mr. Cyrus Washburn, of East Weymouth, is erecting a couple of dwellings at Wollaston Heights.

Anniversary.

This afternoon and evening the East Weymouth Women's Christian Temperance Union held their eighth anniversary in the hall of the Methodist church, a full account of which will appear in your next.

THE STORY OF THE ALAMO.

On the morning of the 1st of March Capt. John W. Smith, with thirty-two men from Gonzales, managed to steal into the Alamo, making its effective force one hundred and eighty-eight men. During the 2d, 3d and 4th, the bombardment continued, answered but occasionally from the fort, and the enemy were reinforced until they numbered some four thousand two hundred men fresh and exuberant, while the Texans were worn out by incessant watching and labor. In the afternoon of the latter day Santa Anna called a council of war, when after much discussion it was decided that the assault should be made on the 6th and the Alamo taken at every hazard.

Shortly after midnight on the morning of Sunday the 6th of March, the movement commenced and in less than one hour the Alamo was surrounded by the entire Mexican army, with the cavalry disposed in such a manner that escape was impossible. The infantry, with scaling ladders forming a circle about the fort advanced rapidly under a hot fire from every piece within the walls, and although beaten back with great loss, their places were instantly filled and steadily and certainly the fatal circle neared a common center. Just at daylight, the ladders were placed against the walls, and the Mexicans mounted to the assault. Twice they were repulsed and the ladders thrown to the ground, only to be reerected and swarm with living, desperate foes. At this moment the enemy wavered, and were about to abandon the assault. Santa Anna, noticing the hesitation of his troops, spurred his horse to the walls and by threats and promises induced them to venture a third attempt. Again were the ladders lifted to the walls, and while those who reached the top were shot and hurled over the parapet, hundreds filled their places, and pressing upward and onward, drove the handful of Texans before them. Now killed, wounded and exhausted, the brave defenders ceased to contest the advance, but still they did not retreat. In an instant the fort was filled with the howling greasers, and a dozen engaged each Texan survivor from every side. Clanking their guns they contested every inch, and cut and shot in an hundred places they fell at last to be despatched by the merciless knives of their enemies. Travis and Crockett fell, with piles of slain about them. Bowie who had been sick in bed for several days was butchered and literally cut in pieces as he lay on his couch unable to rise. Not a single man survived to tell the tale and the massacre was complete. Their bodies were stripped, mutilated, thrown into heaps and buried.

"Thus," says Yokum, "thus fell the Alamo and its heroic defenders; but before them lay the bodies of five hundred and twenty-one of the enemy, with a like number wounded. At an early hour on that Sabbath morning all was still yet the crimson waters of the acquiescent ground around the fort resembled the red flag on the church at Beaulieu. The defenders of Texas did not retreat, but lay there in obedience to the command of their country; and in that obedience the world has witnessed among men no greater moral sublimity."

Of the defenders not one survived. Mrs. Dickinson, the wife of one of the officers, and her infant, together with a negro servant of Col. Travis and two Mexican women, were suffered to depart unmolested, the child having been secreted in one of the buildings and found after the massacre. It is from Mrs. Dickinson that we learn the story of the siege and its terrible finale. With a force sixteen to one, and a loss three times the entire number of the Texans, Santa Anna had succeeded in wresting for a time the presidio of Bexar from the hands of the Americans, and he announced his success in grandiloquent terms to his admiring home government. "I sincerely congratulate your excellency," writes Monasterio, the minister for foreign affairs, "for the brilliant triumph achieved over the perfidious colonists by the national arms under your command. This terrible lesson will be to us fruitful in prosperous results; besides it will teach the sympathizers among our evil-disposed neighbors not to contend against their military talents, and the valor and decision of the brave soldiers who have covered themselves with honor in an assault so heroic. Providence is gracious to us and has destined your excellency to be the savior and preserver of the republic. Glorious with these titles, and ever patriotic your excellency has garnished your temples with laurels of unwithering fame."

On the 25th of February of the following year the troops under Col. Seguin, who had occupied San Antonio, collected the ashes of the heroes of the Alamo, which were placed in a neat black coffin, on the inside of which was engraved the names of Travis, Bowie and Crockett, a solemn procession was formed and the remains borne to the place of interment, where after suitable orations they were buried with military honors.

In keeping with the modern spirit of vandalism which we are pleased to term progress, the sacred walls of the Alamo enclose to-day a prosaic corral. Shouting muleteers and noisy teams fill its enclosure with its resounding clatter and clouds of dust, barrels and boxes and miscellaneous junk gear its corners and black its passages, while a squad of Mexican hoodlums are its only human occupants. Yet hallowed and mouldered and unclean as it stands, it is no less the shrine to which every pilgrim to San Antonio does utmost reverence.

Its baptism of blood, has conferred upon it a fame as world-wide as are the deeds of bravery demanded in the name of human liberty. On the porch of the capital at Austin, stands a little monument which contains all the outward reverence that has been awarded its heroes, a plain chiseled terse inscription, "There they died for the independence of the Alamo and Texas."

ETCHINGS.

BY THE PHILOSOPHER OF MUSQUITO PLAIN.
—Peter Donabue, the millionaire machinist of California, has visited his old place of apprenticeship in the East, returning in a palatial car built at his works. In conversation with a friend, he said, the other day, "I began life as a poor boy, without hope of any inheritance, and when I became an apprentice I faithfully endeavored to learn all that I could of the work." That is the key-note of his success—a thorough understanding of his calling! So the philosopher would say to the boys of Musquito Plain, get a thorough knowledge of something; don't fool away your time with "amateur" projects, or in simply learning some easy branch of bookkeeping or other work, but endeavor to acquire a knowledge of the work you undertake, which will fit you in after years, to occupy stations that may put you into a millionaire's shoes.

—Just as we were congratulating ourselves on the certainty of a mild winter, which the old farmers of Musquito Plain say is inevitable where the autumn storms clear up with mild weather, as they have this fall, we are cruelly disappointed by the announcement of a New York State journal, that the coats on the animals and the hocks on the corn were uncommonly thick, these facts betokening a severe winter. Why corn hocks should need a extra protection against winter's cold is a mystery to be solved by ordinary mortals, as their "duty is all done" earlier in the season.

—Waste of time and opportunities is a vice which is not confined to the young men of Musquito Plain, but pervades every place and marks the condition of society of all grades. To such a trifling cue and make a given number of points, when practiced from three to five hours a day, and never look into a useful and instructive book, is a waste of powers which will produce a crop of fruit injurious to the water and the community in general. "With all your getting and understanding," he moderates in pursuit of pleasure, and make it subject to your advancement in life.

—Sitting upon my farm's fire the other evening, and reflecting upon the vicissitudes of trade, and the poor who are made still poorer by the lack of profitable labor, in these days that try men's honors, the philosopher came to the conclusion that there is no more solid man at present, or at any other time, than the farmer who is out of debt; and it is even safer to get into debt for a farm than for almost any other kind of property. Fire will not consume it, and wind will not blow it over, while the laws of finance will not shrink in value, and it will never go out of fashion.

A SHAM FIGHT IN BRAINTREE.

In 1812, the second year of the war 1812, a sham fight was witnessed on the Green at the North Meeting House in this town. It seems a challenge was given by the military company of the town, then under command of Capt. Ralph Arnold, to the Revolutionary soldiers residing in BRAINTREE, and others not under sixty years old, to meet them on meeting house green on some future day named by the Continentals, for a Sham Fight. The challenge was accepted and the day appointed. News of the engagement spread rapidly through the town and a large crowd assembled to witness the sport. It was a pleasant afternoon in May.

The preliminaries in regard to tactics having been adjusted by the commanders, it was agreed the attack should be made by Arnold's company. The veterans under command of Maj. Elisha French, were to meet them at the point of the bayonet after firing several rounds. At three o'clock P.M. the drum beat to arms; loud shouts went up from the spectators as the onset was about to become. The old soldiers were strongly posted behind the Big Elm in front of the church and waited the approach of Arnold, whose object was to dislodge them by attacking them in the front of the Cemetery and driving them down to the County road a few rods from the Great tree; but after displaying his men and manoeuvring awhile below the hill where the depot now stands, the order was given to march up, fire upon the regulars by platoons, then file to the rear. The order was obeyed and a smart engagement commenced, but the veterans stood firm. After the firing had been kept up for some considerable time and no advantage gained by Arnold, he determined to charge them at the point of the bayonet. The bugle sounded the charge, the militia marched bravely up in front of the Revolutionary soldiers, charged their pieces, then the clash of bayonets began, the veterans stood firm, received the fire of Arnold's men with great coolness, and instead of being driven from their position behind the old Elm, they rushed out and fought like tigers. Arnold's men soon gave way. They found it too warm work to charge the 76 men; they retreated down the hill with the veterans close at their heels and the loud shouting of the multitude. It was supposed that many buttons from vests and waistbands were lost that afternoon through excessive laughter.

THE NEW YORK OBSERVER.

Is one of the most welcome weeklies in our list of exchanges. In addition to its high literary character, it aims to admit nothing to its columns that may reasonably offend Christians of any denomination, having equal freedom of access to the families of all Christian communities. It is thoroughly devoted to the promotion of good feeling, Christian co-operation, and fraternal relations between all churches and all sections of the country. Its friends, its contributors, and its readers are among the most thoughtful and intelligent people of the several denominations. And it has maintained this liberal and evangelical character from its foundation. Every number gives a carefully digested outline of the latest news in all Christian churches, preachers, with impartiality, fairness and candor. By this course, it gives to intelligent men, whatever their religious connection, a full view of all movements in the world of Christian thought, while the departments of Art, Science, Literature, News, Agriculture, Finance, Travel, Narratives, Entertaining Reading for the Young, Notes and Queries, Poetry, etc., make it an attractive family newspaper.

Repairs.
Exterior finish to the shore are familiar with the M. E. church on the road at North Cohasset, which is now under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Thompson, and in a letter to the Hingham Journal it is stated that the church is undergoing a process of renovation. For the past week Mr. J. R. Semonski, of Boston, has been re-freshing its ceiling and walls. The wood work, excepting the pews, has been repainted, also the whole work of painting being under the direction of Hugh Flood, Esq. of Boston. A new pulpit and altar cloth from the well-known manufactory of Braman, Shaw & Co., of Boston, have been procured, and will replace the old, awkward pulpit and sofa. The platform will be considerably lowered so that people in the front seats can look the preacher in the face without danger of dislocating their necks. We propose also to "point" the foundation and have a little less cold air under our feet. The north-west corner have for thirty winters had a "fair chance," and made a clean sweep under the house, and we think it time they were shut out and forced to go round. For means to make these repairs we are indebted to the liberality of Henry Tolman, Esq., Hon. E. S. Tobey, Hon. Jacob Sleeper, and Mr. C. G. Beale and a few other friends, of Boston. The pulpit and furniture are the gift of Edwin H. Sampson, Esq. of Boston.

THE STORY OF THE ALAMO.

On the morning of the 1st of March Capt. John W. Smith with thirty-two men from Gonzales, managed to steal into the Alamo, making its effective force one hundred and eighty-eight men. During the 21st and 24th, the bombardment continued, and the enemy were reinforced until they numbered some four thousand two hundred men fresh and exultant, while the Texans were worn out by incessant watching and labor. In the afternoon of the latter day Santa Anna called a council of war, when after much discussion it was decided that the assault should be made on the 6th and the Alamo taken at every hazard.

Shortly after midnight on the morning of Sunday the 6th of March, the movement commenced and in less than one hour the Alamo was surrounded by the entire Mexican army, with the cavalry disposed in such a manner that escape was impossible. The infantry, with scaling ladders forming a circle about the fort advanced rapidly under a hot fire from every piece within the walls, and although beaten back with great loss, their places were instantly filled and steadily and certainly the fatal circle neared a common centre. Just at daylight, the ladders were placed against the walls, and the Mexicans mounted to the assault. Twice they were repulsed and the ladders thrown to the ground, only to be reerected and swarm with living, desperate foes. At this moment the enemy wavered, and were about to abandon the assault. Santa Anna noticing the hesitation of his troops spurred his horse to the walls and with threats and promises induced them to venture a third attempt. Again were the ladders lifted to the walls, and while those who reached the top were shot and hurled over the parapet, hundreds filled their places, and pressing upward and onward, drove the handful of Texans before them. Now killed, wounded and exhausted, the brave defenders ceased to contest the advance, but still they did not retreat. In an instant the fort was filled with the howling survivors and a dozen engaged each Texan survivor from every side. Few escaped for quarter, if indeed they had any and many were not expected nor given. Clinging their guns they contested every inch, and cut and shot in an hundred places they fell at last to be despatched by the merciless knives of their enemies. Travis and Crockett fell, with piles of slain about them. Bowie who had been sick in bed for several days was butchered and literally cut in pieces as he lay on his couch unable to rise. Not a single man survived to tell the tale and the massacre was complete. Their bodies were stripped, mutilated, thrown into heaps and buried.

"Thus," says Yokum, "thus fell the Alamo and its heroic defenders; but before them lay the bodies of five hundred and twenty-one of the enemy, with a like number wounded. At an early hour on that Sabbath morning all was still; yet the crimson waters of the aqueduct around the fort resembled the red flag on the church at Bessar. The defenders of Texas did not retreat, but lay there in obedience to the command of their country and in that obedience the world has witnessed among men no greater moral nobility."

Of the defenders not one survived. Mrs. Dickinson, the wife of one of the officers, and her infant, together with a negro servant of Col. Travis and two Mexican women, were suffered to depart unmolested, the child having been secreted in one of the buildings and from Mrs. Dickinson we learn the story of the siege and its terrible loss. With a force sixteen to one, and a loss three times the entire number of the Texans, Santa Anna had succeeded in wresting for a time the presidio of Bexar from the hands of the Americans, and he announced his success in grandiloquent terms to his admiring home government. "I sincerely congratulate your excellency," writes Montero, the minister for foreign affairs, "for the brilliant triumph achieved over the perfidious colonists by the national arms under your command. This terrible lesson will be to us fruitful in prosperous results; besides it will teach the sympathizers among our evil-disposed neighbors not to contend against our military talents, and the valor and decision of the brave soldiers who have covered themselves with honor in an assault so heroic. Providence is propitious to us and has destined your excellency to be the savior and preserver of the republic. Glorious with these titles, and ever patriotic your excellency has garnished your temples with laurels of unwithering fame."

On the 25th of February of the following year the troops under Col. Seguin, who had occupied San Antonio, collected the ashes of the heroes of the Alamo, which were placed in a neat black coffin, on the inside of which was engraved the names of Travis, Bowie and Crockett, a solemn procession was formed and the remains borne to the place of interment, where after suitable orations they were buried with military honors.

In keeping with the modern spirit of vandalism which we are pleased to term progress, the sacred walls of the Alamo enclose to-day a prosaic corral. Shouting muleteers and noisy teams fill its enclosure with resounding oaths and clouds of dust, barrels and boxes and miscellaneous junk grace its corners and black its passages, while a squad of Mexican hostlers are its only human occupants. Yet battered and mouldered and uncared as it stands, it is no less the shrine to which every pilgrim to San Antonio does utmost reverence.

Repairing.
Excursions to the shore are familiar with the M. E. church on the road at North Cohasset, which is now under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Thompson, and in a letter to the Hingham Journal is stated that the church is undergoing a process of renovation. For the past week Mr. J. R. Semonski, of Boston, has been re-freshing its ceiling and walls. The work was, excepting the pews, has been repaired, also the whole work of painting being under the direction of Hugh Flood, Esq. of Boston. A new pulpit and arm chair from the well-known manufactory of Braman, Shaw & Co., of Boston, have been procured, and will replace the old, awkward pulpit and sofa. The platform will be considerably lowered so that people in the front seats can look the preacher in the face without danger of dislocating their necks. We propose also to "joint" the foundation and have a little less cold air under our feet. The north-west gables have for thirty winters had a "fair chance" and made a clever record under the hands of the workmen. They were shut out and forced to go round. For means to make these repairs we are indebted to the liberality of Henry Tolman, Esq., Hon. E. S. Tobey, Hon. Jacob Speer, and Mr. C. G. Beale and a few other friends, of Boston. The pulpit and furniture are the gift of Edwin H. Sampson, Esq. of Boston.

BY THE PHILOSOPHER OF MOSQUITO PLAIN.
—Peter Donahoe, the millionaire machinist of California, has visited his old place of apprenticeship in the East, returning in a palatial car built at his works. In conversation with a friend, he said, the other day, "I began life as a poor boy, without hope of any inheritance, and when I became an apprentice I faithfully endeavored to learn all that I could of the work. That is the key-note of his success—a thorough understanding of his calling." So the philosopher would say to the boys of Musquitto Plain, get a thorough knowledge of something! I don't fool away your time with "amateur" projects, or in simply learning some easy branch of bookmaking or other work, but endeavor to acquire a knowledge of the work you undertake, which will pay you in after years to come; stations that may put you into a millionaire's shoes.

—Just as we were congratulating ourselves on the certainty of a mild winter, which the old farmers of Musquitto Plain say is inevitable where the autumn storms clear up with mild weather, as they have this fall, we are cruelly disappointed by the announcement of a New York State local paper, that the coats on the animals and the licks on the corn were unusually thick, these facts betokening a severe winter. Why corn licks should have an extra protection against winter's cold is a mystery not to be solved by ordinary mortals, as their "duty is all done" earlier in the season.

—Waste of time and opportunities is a vice which is not confined to the young men of Musquitto Plain, but permeates every place and every condition of society. To such a brilliant one and make a given number of points, when practiced from three to five hours a day, and never look into a useful and instructive book, is a waste of powers which will produce a crop of fruit injurious to the waster and the community in general. "With all your getting good understanding," Be moderate in pursuit of pleasure, and make it subservient to your advancement in life. "Sitting over no ferns," live the other evening, and reflecting upon the vicissitudes of trade, and the poor who are made still poorer by the lack of profitable labor, in these days that try men's honor, the philosopher came to the conclusion that there is no more solid man at present, or at any other time, than the farmer who is out of debt and is even safer to get into debt for a farm than for almost any other kind of property. Five will not conserve it, and will not blot it out, while the laws of finance will not shrink in value, and it will never go out of fashion.

A SHAM FIGHT IN BRAINTREE.

In 1813, the second year of the war 1812, a sham fight was witnessed on the Green at the North Meeting House in this town. It seems a challenge was given by the military company of the town, then under command of Capt. Ralph Arnold, to the Revolutionary soldiers then residing in Braintree, and not under sixty years old, to meet them on meeting house green on some future day named by the Continental Congress as a Sham Fight. The challenge was accepted and the day appointed. News of the engagement spread rapidly through the town and a large crowd assembled to witness the sport. It was a pleasant afternoon in May.

The preliminaries in regard to tactics having been adjusted by the commanders, it was agreed the attack should be made by Arnold's company. The veterans under command of Maj. Elsie French, were posted at the point of the bayonet after firing several rounds. At three o'clock P. M., the drum beat to arms; loud shouts went up from the spectators as the onset was about to be made. The old soldiers were strongly posted behind the Big Elm in front of the church and waited the approach of Arnold, whose object was to dislodge them by attacking them in the front of the Cemetery and driving them down to the County road a few rods from the Great tree; but after deploying his men and manoeuvring awhile below the hill where the depot now stands, the order was given to march up, fire upon the regulars by platoons, then fire to the rear. The order was obeyed and a smart engagement commenced, but the veterans stood firm. After the firing had been kept up for some considerable time and no advantage gained by Arnold, he determined to charge them at the point of the bayonet. The bugle sounded the charge, the militia marched bravely up in front of the Revolutionaries, discharged their pieces, then the clash of bayonets began, the veterans stood firm received the fire of Arnold's men with great coolness, and instead of being driven from their position behind the old Elm, they rushed out and fought like tigers. Arnold's men soon gave way. They found it too warm work to charge the 76 men; they retreated down the hill with the veterans close at their heels until the loud shouting of the multitude. It was supposed that many buttons from vests and waistbands were lost that afternoon through excessive laughter.

Is the most welcome weekly in our list of exchanges. In addition to its high literary character, it aims to admit nothing to its columns that may reasonably offend Christians of any denomination, having equal freedom of access to the families of all Christian communities. It is thoroughly devoted to the promotion of good feeling, Christian co-operation, and fraternal relations between all churches and all sects of the country. Its friends, its contributors, and its readers are among the most thoughtful and intelligent people of the several denominations. And it has maintained this liberal and evangelical character from its foundation. Every number gives a carefully-digested outline of the latest news in all Christian churches, presented with impartiality, fairness and candor. By this course, it gives to intelligent men, whatever their religious connection, a full view of all movements in the world of Christian thought, while the departments of Art, Science, Literature, News, Agriculture, Finance, Travel, Narrative, Entertaining Reading for the Young, Notes and Queries, Poetry, &c., make it an attractive family newspaper.

Excursions to the shore are familiar with the M. E. church on the road at North Cohasset, which is now under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Thompson, and in a letter to the Hingham Journal is stated that the church is undergoing a process of renovation. For the past week Mr. J. R. Semonski, of Boston, has been re-freshing its ceiling and walls. The work was, excepting the pews, has been repaired, also the whole work of painting being under the direction of Hugh Flood, Esq. of Boston. A new pulpit and arm chair from the well-known manufactory of Braman, Shaw & Co., of Boston, have been procured, and will replace the old, awkward pulpit and sofa. The platform will be considerably lowered so that people in the front seats can look the preacher in the face without danger of dislocating their necks. We propose also to "joint" the foundation and have a little less cold air under our feet. The north-west gables have for thirty winters had a "fair chance" and made a clever record under the hands of the workmen. They were shut out and forced to go round. For means to make these repairs we are indebted to the liberality of Henry Tolman, Esq., Hon. E. S. Tobey, Hon. Jacob Speer, and Mr. C. G. Beale and a few other friends, of Boston. The pulpit and furniture are the gift of Edwin H. Sampson, Esq. of Boston.

—Peter Donahoe, the millionaire machinist of California, has visited his old place of apprenticeship in the East, returning in a palatial car built at his works. In conversation with a friend, he said, the other day, "I began life as a poor boy, without hope of any inheritance, and when I became an apprentice I faithfully endeavored to learn all that I could of the work. That is the key-note of his success—a thorough understanding of his calling." So the philosopher would say to the boys of Musquitto Plain, get a thorough knowledge of something! I don't fool away your time with "amateur" projects, or in simply learning some easy branch of bookmaking or other work, but endeavor to acquire a knowledge of the work you undertake, which will pay you in after years to come; stations that may put you into a millionaire's shoes.

—Waste of time and opportunities is a vice which is not confined to the young men of Musquitto Plain, but permeates every place and every condition of society. To such a brilliant one and make a given number of points, when practiced from three to five hours a day, and never look into a useful and instructive book, is a waste of powers which will produce a crop of fruit injurious to the waster and the community in general. "With all your getting good understanding," Be moderate in pursuit of pleasure, and make it subservient to your advancement in life. "Sitting over no ferns," live the other evening, and reflecting upon the vicissitudes of trade, and the poor who are made still poorer by the lack of profitable labor, in these days that try men's honor, the philosopher came to the conclusion that there is no more solid man at present, or at any other time, than the farmer who is out of debt and is even safer to get into debt for a farm than for almost any other kind of property. Five will not conserve it, and will not blot it out, while the laws of finance will not shrink in value, and it will never go out of fashion.

A SHAM FIGHT IN BRAINTREE.

In 1813, the second year of the war 1812, a sham fight was witnessed on the Green at the North Meeting House in this town. It seems a challenge was given by the military company of the town, then under command of Capt. Ralph Arnold, to the Revolutionary soldiers then residing in Braintree, and not under sixty years old, to meet them on meeting house green on some future day named by the Continental Congress as a Sham Fight. The challenge was accepted and the day appointed. News of the engagement spread rapidly through the town and a large crowd assembled to witness the sport. It was a pleasant afternoon in May.

The preliminaries in regard to tactics having been adjusted by the commanders, it was agreed the attack should be made by Arnold's company. The veterans under command of Maj. Elsie French, were posted at the point of the bayonet after firing several rounds. At three o'clock P. M., the drum beat to arms; loud shouts went up from the spectators as the onset was about to be made. The old soldiers were strongly posted behind the Big Elm in front of the church and waited the approach of Arnold, whose object was to dislodge them by attacking them in the front of the Cemetery and driving them down to the County road a few rods from the Great tree; but after deploying his men and manoeuvring awhile below the hill where the depot now stands, the order was given to march up, fire upon the regulars by platoons, then fire to the rear. The order was obeyed and a smart engagement commenced, but the veterans stood firm. After the firing had been kept up for some considerable time and no advantage gained by Arnold, he determined to charge them at the point of the bayonet. The bugle sounded the charge, the militia marched bravely up in front of the Revolutionaries, discharged their pieces, then the clash of bayonets began, the veterans stood firm received the fire of Arnold's men with great coolness, and instead of being driven from their position behind the old Elm, they rushed out and fought like tigers. dent upon this point are the ideas of the country.

THE NEW DAILY.

The new Democratic daily, under the editorial management of Hon. Montgomery Blair, about which such a flourish was at once made, has made its appearance, and although "Union" in name, is decidedly a Democrat in sentiment.

With such a flourish as W. W. Corcoran, who is attempting to repeat his experience with the "Union" and lose a few thousands in "the case," there would seem to be but one reason why it should not prosper and successfully meet the vacuum which it is destined to fill. Its editorial, as were to be expected from Mr. Blair and his co-laborer, ex-Archbishop of Baltimore, are vigorous, and its news items are full of interest.

It is a well arranged, neat and compact party newspaper. The G. A. R. Concert.

Known to all next Thursday evening has a feature of especial interest in the fact that the popular and entertaining "Barnabee Troupe" are to do the vocalizing, while the famous "Boston Cadet Band" will furnish sweet sounds in the instrumental department of the grand entertainment. With such an array of talent, it does not seem to be a matter of doubt that the concert will be a success.

At the Capitol.

But little has been done in Congress the past week. All sorts of rumors have been floating about as to the prospect of trouble over the result of the election, but the bill is gaining ground, and the prospect of success and conservative opinion will prevail, and serious trouble be averted.

Mr. Cox's Investigating Committee left here last night for New York. No one questions but that its report will be a white-washing one, inasmuch as its factious chairman has taken frequent occasion to remark in the House, that he had never heard and did not believe that any fraud was practiced during the elections, in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. As for its investigations in San Francisco, its office in Philadelphia, if no fraud is unearthed it will certainly be the fault of the committee, as fraud of the most glaring nature was detected by the United States officers, and has since been brought to the attention of the courts. This committee, to prosecute the laborers with a title of the zeal pursued by Mr. Morrison's committee in New Orleans, the official standing of the delegation from the metropolis will be sadly demoralized.

Mr. Morrison's committee, by the way, are having a hard time of it in New Orleans. Upon their arrival in that city, with much flourish of trumpets and high sounding addresses they announced their determination of probing the election sore to its innermost centre, and under the name and authority of the Speaker of the House, unconditionally demanded the immediate production of all persons and papers. In the first place, the Returning Board, having no longer an official existence, declined to be subpoenaed, as such, and starting to relate, denied the authority of the much bewildered committee to investigate its acts, following it up with a positive refusal to produce the desired papers. Then, when subpoenaed as an individual, Geo. Wells has entered himself among the long list of contumacious witnesses with which this unfortunate Congress has had to deal, and his associates have followed suit. But saddest of all, Mr. Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Co., has declined with thanks to gratify the committee in the perusal of the various telegrams which passed between Mr. Chandler and other Republican managers in the North, and their various correspondents in New Orleans. It was from this source that Mr. Morrison anticipated the keenest pleasure and the richest developments. His committee were selected upon the standard of sharp and keen nasal appendages, with an inclination and capacity for scenting moral and political delinquencies, and it was hoped that this practical accomplishment would be of practical use to their party. But alas! the best laid plans of mice and politicians are apt, on occasion, to fly off at a tangent.

ABOUT TOWN.

Another wholesale discharge of female employees was made on Saturday from the Bureau of Engineering and Printing of the Treasury Department. The discharge is announced by reason of the reorganization of the revenue printing to the private companies, but the probabilities are that it is desirable to have a "new deal" by discharging a few hundred, and placing their Congressional "influence" under renewed obligations by hiring them over again. At least, such has been the custom of the past. No fault can be laid to the Treasury officials, as the political pressure brought to bear upon them for appointments is irresistible, and even the most firm officials can but give way in the end. The fault lies in the system, and until the adoption of clearly defined and firmly executed civil service rules, such as President Grant has tried so faithfully to introduce, and tried in vain, against the opposition in Congress of both parties, there will be no improvement in the situation. In the present instance four hundred or more ladies, the majority of whom are supporting families upon their slender earnings, are turned adrift in the midst of winter to care for themselves as best they may. In time will be learned that the ideas of the President upon this point are the ideas of the country.

THE NEW DAILY.

The new Democratic daily, under the editorial management of Hon. Montgomery Blair, about which such a flourish was at once made, has made its appearance, and although "Union" in name, is decidedly a Democrat in sentiment.

With such a flourish as W. W. Corcoran, who is attempting to repeat his experience with the "Union" and lose a few thousands in "the case," there would seem to be but one reason why it should not prosper and successfully meet the vacuum which it is destined to fill. Its editorial, as were to be expected from Mr. Blair and his co-laborer, ex-Archbishop of Baltimore, are vigorous, and its news items are full of interest.

REASON'S NOTICE INSERTED AT TEN CENTS A LINE.

CRIME AND SABBATH DESECRATION.

At the General Conference of the Rhine Prison Society, held in Germany, the experiences of services at the Zellen prison for many years, were recounted by the Chaplain as follows:

"In order to set forth strongly the relation of Sunday desecration to crime, a distinct inquiry with reference thereto, had been directed to the larger German penal institutions, in which Saturday evening as the rest-time to Sunday, and 'blue Monday,' which is put in its place as the caritative of Sunday, was brought under consideration. The desecration of the Sabbath stands in the closest connection with crime, according to the judgments from North and South Germany. Where religion, where Sabbath keeping has disappeared, there it is vain to hope for discipline and order, for respect towards law and authority. With moral ruin, physical as well as mental goes hand in hand, and the criminal is ready. The indirect connection between Sunday desecration and suicide lies clearly in sight. Among men, the fewest self-murders occur on Sunday, but the most, Monday and Tuesday. In debauchery on Sunday perhaps the last farthing is merely spent. Monday comes and with it the awakening; or perhaps the 'blue Monday' has taken the place of a Sunday devoted to labor, and Tuesday morning being the last anniversary which drives the wretched man down to eternal night."

"A series of statistical facts shows that in particular, crimes committed in passion, e. g. personal assaults, homicides, and resistance of the laws, stand in the connection of cause and effect, of Sunday desecration. In 40 of the prisons in Germany, of the 10,228 convicts, 963, or about 10 per cent, were there for wounding and killing, of whom 350, or about 40 per cent, had committed these acts on Sunday. The greater part had been at the dram shop. Among the men guilty of crime on Monday, 64 per cent, had kept 'blue Monday.' Something like a quarter of the offences against morality fall upon Sunday, with its dances and carousing. On Sunday and Monday, of the cases of robbery, more than three quarters occur after alcoholic visits. In many instances the germ of crime lies in Sunday desecration. Embittered feelings among young workmen, which in many ways lead to violence, manslaughter and murder, have arisen on Sunday, in public localities and in the midst of the play and the dance—a fact sustained by striking examples."

FIXING THE FURNACE.

The chill breath of winter is in the air, and as the night wind whistles around the house, and wrestles with the blinds, the husband and father, happy that his wife and little ones are sheltered and comfortable, draws the drapery of his couch about him and is about going off to peaceful dreams, when the partner of his joys and sharer of his sorrows, says, "Seth, you must go down and fix the furnace, or the gas will strangle the baby."

Then the wretched man buttons his breakfast frock over his night slipper, pokes his left toe into his right slipper and his right into the left, and "drunks on with sleep," feels his way down stairs, falls over the cock's head of coal and kindlings at the kitchen door, and having loosened several dimes, jerks into the cellar like a torrent. He jerks open the furnace door, inhales a few quarts of cold gas, spits it up mixed with some hard words, bangs the door and knocks over the long poker and cast iron shovel with a clang like a rolling mill in full operation. He sizes the wrench, and looking it on to the grate, shakes it savagely, and the grate which has hitherto yielded sullenly to his strength, revolves as if it was set in oil, depositing the whole fire in the ash box with the exception of two or three big clinkers that wedge it in the clinkers. First he tries to pull it up edge-wise, then he wrenches it, and the wretched thing won't move. Then he gets down on his hands and knees and jabs at the clinkers with the poker like a man stirring up a cage of animals in a menagerie, but the hot coals heat him to another attempt on the wrench, and, springing to his feet, he braces himself for a mighty pull, when the grate slips into place like a spring lock, the wrench slides off and bangs his bare shins as he staggers back and knocks his head against the plaster partition.

Just then the policeman rings the front door bell and asks "if there is a fire in there?" and having a door slammed in his face, tells his relief at the next corner that "old Simkins, at 42, is drunk and rising an awful row."

That unhappy citizen has hurried back to the cellar, and throwing a basket full of wood and kindlings into the furnace, he lights them, and starts for the coal bin. Returning with a basket full of coal, he essays to place it, but the furnace door, which he has just closed, is so tight that he cannot get it open. He then takes a puff of wood-smoke strikes him in the eyes, the edge of the hot strikes just below the furnace door, and the contents are dashed on the floor, with the exception of the fine particles, which sit into his slippers. With the calmness of despair he fills the furnace-pot by shovels-full and with success heralding a coming cold, waits until the fire is an accomplished fact. As he reaches the chamber-door a dismal wail freezes his already chilled blood, and he is welcomed back by his loving wife with,

"I wish you could see do anything about the house, Seth, without making such a dreadful noise. Here is the baby broad awake, and I don't believe we shall get another wink of sleep to-night."

Then the wretched man pulls the few hairs a virtuous life has left him, the comforts of his home fade from his mind; and he wishes he was a homeless wanderer in the cold streets.

Walnut trees sometimes attain prodigious size and great age. An Italian architect mentions having seen at St. Nicholas, in Lombardy, a single plank of the walnut twenty-five feet wide, upon which the Emperor Frederick III, had given a sumptuous banquet.

Whalebone has risen, and is said to be still rising. This is bad news for whales.

Several years ago the wife of Alonso Hayward of San Francisco obtained a divorce from her husband, and received from him a full half of his property, then amounting to many millions of dollars. Since the separation his circumstances have undergone a great change for the worse, and his divorced wife has repeatedly offered him a large part of her portion. As he persistently refuses to accept a cent of it, she has altered her tack, and courted him so warmly that remarriage is reported as having taken place.

Here is an English statement to the effect that the phrase "Go West" did not originate with Horace Greeley; not a Benjamin West, the great American painter, wanted to go to Italy and study the old masters, his friends in Philadelphia took up a collection and gave it to him with the remark, "Go West."

Railway tickets were originated by a station master at Clapham, England, about forty years ago. From that time the printing of these tickets has remained in the hands of the same family, who have pursued it with an amount of perseverance and ingenuity perfectly marvellous; and it is a curious fact to know that in one long building in a suburban street of a provincial town the tickets for the whole world, except North America, are made.

Captain Bayton, the man with a swimming apparatus, has been for a long time unheard of. His latest feat was a recent attempt to swim down the river Po, from Turin to Venice, a distance requiring from seven to eight days. After eighty-six hours in the water fatigue induced a fever, which necessitated his landing and relinquishing the attempt.

The proposal to submerge a part of North Africa by means of a canal from the Gulf of Yabes, letting the water of the Mediterranean westward over the lake regions of Djerd, seems, from the facts just detailed by MM. Rudaire and Dupuis, to be not only practicable, but also likely to turn out a remunerative undertaking.

GOOD ADVICE TO BARBERS.

Abundance of clean napkins, whether you work a ten or fifteen cent shop. Keep your razors well honed.

Wash your hands previous to every shave.

Don't finger the lips of your customers too freely.

Never puff your hot breath into his face while shaving.

Don't waste time in poking lather up his nostrils or in his mouth.

Keep your combs and brushes plainly clean.

Do not compel your customer to talk whether he wants to or not.

Always be pleasant and polite; it costs nothing, yet pays.

Regular and thorough rinsing out of soap suds and brush.

When jerking a gentleman's head round or jerking his nose, just imagine the predicament if either one should happen to come off. Moral: Handle gently.

When you come to dressing the head look it tenderly, and not like a Sioux Indian taking a scalp.

The foregoing is the quintessence of forty years' experience in the barber shop. Neglect these maxims and you will be a lot of all you life; adhere to them and you will soon be pronounced A 1 in the profession.

To which one who has suffered I add: After shaving, carefully wash all soap from the face with a clean, sweet sponge and clean water, and do not rub it with dirty greasy towel; also, keep the towel out of the "victim's" eyes, ears, nostrils and mouth. And do not, without his consent, besmear his head with pomade or oil, or his mustache with "cosmetics," or any other vile preparation that you may happen to have.

IMPROVED PAVEMENT.

The recent discussion respecting the merits of various kinds of patent pavements recalls the experience of Consulhook with an improved pavement introduced there some years ago. It seems that the owners of a patent asphalt pavement obtained from the borough authorities permission to lay a couple of hundred yards of it on one of the side streets. At first, while the weather remained cold, it did well enough; but in the spring it began to soften, and by the time summer came it was like dough, excepting that when it got hold of anything it held on like death. A man would attempt to walk across it, and would sink in it; then he would find that he couldn't move either leg. Then he would cry for help, and some one would push a plank out to him, and he would struggle out of his boots and walk ashore. Ever so many carts and dogs were caught, and they perished in their tracks, so that, after awhile, the whole street was filled with boot leeks and cat skeletons and such rubbish, sticking upon the surface, until it looked like a jungle. Mr. Consulhook tried to cross one day and was captured. They couldn't dig him out, and so they put up a derrick, and a man reached the animal upon snow-shoes, and fixed the rope around under his fore legs. Then they hoisted him, and the mule rose with a thick rope of pitch hanging from each leg, so that by the time he got forty feet up, he looked like a mule with an extraordinary tendency to grow in the legs. Then the tackle slipped, and the asphalt was so elastic that the mule flew back into the old place with a "kerchock." But they got him out finally, and the next day a lay fell on the pavement, face downward, and was plucked fast. They saved him by cutting his clothes open in the back, and taking the boy out naked, like a pea from the pod; but he left the tip of his nose in the pitch. So then the authorities thought they would take the pavement up. It couldn't be cut or dug, so the workmen undertook to roll it over as you would roll up a sheet of music; but when they had gone forty feet, it sprang back over the men and assumed its old shape, except that there were four lumps on the surface, where the buried workman lay. At last they hitched twenty or thirty oxen to one end of the pavement and hauled it away. Then they slid it into the river, and it floated down below Spring Mill, and lodged upon a shoal, and there it remained permanently. In the course of a year, a fish formed on it, and it is now a handsome island; and it is valuable, too. No doubt some day it will be utilized by a mining company that wants to go into the business of getting out leather. There are veins of old boots in that island which would make the fortune of anybody who knows how to work them; and we are not certain but that it will pay to get out the cat bones for fertilizers.

"If there are any more 'cold waves' coming let 'em wave—in some other direction."

If this convulsion business goes on, bye and bye we shall hear of some long-suffering man ashing his sidewalk with the remains of his mother-in-law.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE UNION.

The report of the East Weymouth Temperance Union, presented at the eighth anniversary of the Society, in the M. E. Church, last week, is as follows:

In presenting our report it is with mingled feelings of gratitude and regret; grateful that some good has been accomplished, regret that we have not been able to do more in a cause which demands so much. While we cannot be unimpaired that we have crowned our labors with success, yet it is with the conviction "that neither is he that plants anything, nor he that waters, but God that giveth the increase."

Eight years ago there was not a single society of women for the promotion of temperance in all the land. Everywhere women suffered from the liquor traffic, but they suffered in silence, with no hope of suppressing the evil. At that time God put it into the heart of one of the best of women, Mrs. W. B. Barker, to attempt to stay this destructive business in our village. Her whole soul was in prayer to God that he would in some way arrest the tidal influence that was destroying the husbands, brothers, and sons of our community. She could not help indifferently upon the miseries of others, or see without grief the promising young men of our village slowly, but surely, ruined. To Mrs. Barker belonged the honor of originating the Woman's Temperance movement which has swept like a night wind over the land, and now numbers itself by counting flourishing societies, and by the number of individual members.

After making up her mind, with God's help, that something could be done, and that it was her duty to move in the matter, her next step was to call on other ladies and inspire them with her views and feelings. The result was a call for a public meeting of all women who were interested, a meeting for special prayer that God would direct and lead us, for the young men, and for the women, to come to the aid of a refuge and safe retreat from the liquor saloons and billiard rooms, that are flourishing on every hand. This meeting was held April 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19,
